Children's research institute hosts BayBio tech showcase

More than 80 local biotech industry leaders gathered at Children's Hospital Oakland's research center on Feb. 19 to rub elbows with Children's researchers during a BayBio networking event. The BayBio Institute non-profit connects biotech players, from scientists to lawyers to government agency representatives. Poster presentations and lab tours sparked conversations that can lead to future joint healthcare technology ventures. The collaborative effort was organized by BayBio, Children's research institute, and Children's Hospital & Research Center Foundation.

5: Frans Kuypers, PhD (l), Children's senior scientist and Michael Zinke (r), principal and branding director at RadiantBrands, talk tech at the BayBio showcase hosted by Children's research institute.
